Causal reasoning about others' behavior may draw on counterfactual simulation of traits and situational variables. Choosing the best explanation for someone's behavior involves weighing trait and situation causes. Causal reasoning about others' behavior may draw on counterfactual simulation of traits and situational variables.